COLOUR AND GRAIN

This product is created through a fuming (ammonia) process, where the resulting darker colour depends on the natural tannin content of the oak—higher tannin levels produce deeper tones. Because tannin varies between trees, even within the same forest, fumed products naturally display more colour variation than stained finishes, but provide a warmer, more characterful appearance that enhances the natural beauty of the wood. Boards must be well-mixed during installation to achieve a balanced overall look.

Rustic oak showcases strong natural character, including prominent grain patterns, longer medullary rays, and occasional crotches, swirls, and burls. You will also find natural knots, cracks, and structural features that have been professionally repaired and filled to maintain stability while preserving the authentic appearance of the timber. Plain-sawn boards may display plumed or flared grain formations, further enhancing the lively, varied look. This inherent diversity in colour, figure, and grain is an intentional and defining feature of rustic wood flooring, contributing to its warm, natural charm.
